GLOSSARY

Comprehensive Land Claim

Comprehensive land claims are based on the assertion of continuing Aboriginal rights and claims to land that have not been dealt with by treaty or other means. Comprehensive land claims negotiations address concerns raised by Aboriginal people, governments and third parties in Canada about who has the legal right to own or use the lands and resources in areas under claim.

Historic Treaty

An Indian treaty, as understood by the Government of Canada and the courts, is an agreement between the Crown and a specified group or groups of Indian people (Treaty First Nations) in which the parties created mutually binding obligations that were to be solemnly respected. The treaty sets out the promises, obligations, and benefits of the respective parties to the treaty. Between 1725 and 1923, treaties were signed between the Crown and many of the Indian tribes and nations living in what was to become Canada. Today these treaties are known as historic Indian treaties.

FINAL AGREEMENTS

A Final Agreement is the outcome of successful land claim negotiations. It details agreements reached between the Aboriginal group, the province or territory, and Canada on all issues at hand, including resources, financial benefits, self-government, and land ownership. The Final Agreement must be ratified by the parties, and signed by the principals. Canada then passes settlement legislation that gives effect to the Final Agreement and renders it valid.

GLOSSAIRE

Revendication globale

Les revendications globales sont fondées sur le principe du maintien des droits et des titres autochtones qui n'ont pas été couverts dans les traités ou autres actes juridiques. Les négociations concernant ces revendications territoriales globales traitent des questions soulevées par les peuples autochtones, par les gouvernements et par les tierces parties au sujet du droit de propriété ou d'utilisation des terres et des ressources dans les secteurs faisant l'objet d'une revendication.

Traité historique

Un traité indien, au sens où l'entendent le gouvernement du Canada et les tribunaux, est un accord conclu entre l'État et un ou plusieurs groupes particuliers d'Indiens (Premières nations visées par un traité) dans le cadre duquel les parties ont créé des obligations mutuellement exécutoires qui doivent être solennellement respectées. Le traité énonce les promesses, les obligations et les avantages des parties respectives. Entre 1725 et 1923, des traités ont été signés entre l'État et de nombreuses tribus et nations indiennes qui habitaient sur le territoire qui deviendrait plus tard le Canada. Ces traités sont maintenant connus sous le nom de traités indiens historiques.

ENTENTES DÉFINITIVES

Une entente définitive est le résultat de la réussite des négociations des revendications territoriales. Elle énonce les ententes conclues entre un groupe autochtone, la province ou le territoire et le Canada sur toutes les questions abordées, notamment les ressources, les avantages financiers, l'autonomie gouvernementale et la propriété foncière. L'entente finale doit être ratifiée par les parties et signée par les représentants. Le Canada légifère ensuite sur le règlement pour mettre en vigueur l'entente définitive et lui donner sa validité.
